Lucille Procter Nawara: Forest Reflections

January 16 through May 2, 2014
Rotunda Gallery, Building 18

Lucille Procter Nawara was born into a family of musicians but always knew she would be an artist. While growing up she spent much of her time surrounded by nature where she explored forest pools and brooks filled with rapids or climbed the granite boulders of the White Mountains in New Hampshire with her siblings. These memories of wild and remote landscapes, waterfalls and the ocean still influence her work today. When not exploring the outdoors, she enthusiastically studied drawing and music. As the daughter of two composers and music teachers, she followed their lead and trained on the violin for many years and played in a number of chamber groups.

For more information contact Maureen Devine, Art Coordinator at devinem@umich.edu.

New Moves

- Biointerfaces: Dr. Somin Lee - Building 10

Facilities

- Building 18 - Carpet Cleaning

Events

- 1/16 - Orthovoltage Training
- 1/16 - CBSSM Seminar - Erica Sutton, PhD

Announcements

- The NCRC Wellness Center will now be open on Saturday and Sunday, 5am - 9pm, starting January 18th.
- MLibrary@NCRC: New Subscription to Open Helix-tutorials on bioinformatics and genomics databases and tools

Reminders

- Tech Tip: Have a CoreImage laptop or tablet? Moving to Windows 7 (links require Level-2 password) is a great opportunity for “data hygiene.” Clean up your unused folders and delete old or Lucille Procter Nawara was born into a family of musicians but always knew she would be an artist. While growing up she spent much of her time surrounded by nature where she explored forest pools and brooks filled with rapids or climbed the granite boulders of the White Mountains in New Hampshire with her siblings. These memories of wild and remote landscapes, waterfalls and the ocean still influence her work today. When not exploring the outdoors, she enthusiastically studied drawing and music. As the daughter of two composers and music teachers, she followed their lead and trained on the violin for many years and played in a number of chamber groups.

For more information contact Maureen Devine, Art Coordinator at devinem@umich.edu.